Bonnard became captivated with the substance of paint as a means of embracing the out- of-doors and seizing light. Scenes of his family gathered about the supper table, in the backyard, or in the halo of affection sur- rounding a newborn infant injected intimacy and genuine emotion into his earliest pictures.

The painter is not yet defiled by the putrid kiss of the Beaux-Arts. But Bonnard Furthermore, the title of No 2 refers specifically to the actress who had played Klytaimnestra, Mme Laurent. Ernst's awareness of the currents that fed his art is nowhere better expressed than in his statement about the Cologne of his youth: "The geographical, political and climatic conditions of Cologne as a city may be propitious to create fertile conflicts in a sensitive child's brain.
